He Shakes Hands With the Memories of the Past.

HE WAS A BOY ONCE MORE

Girl Who Spelled a Word Wrong to Save Him Shame and the Power of a Rabbit's Hind Foot for Scratching Are All Remembered.

We reproduce from the Charlottesville Progress the following pen picture of boyhood days by John Philip Glenn, written to that paper and published under the head "Squire Glenn's Holiday."

We do not know Mr. John Philip Glenn, but he deserves to rank among the emotional writers of America in the front rank:

IN SPITE OF PROTEST.

"Mrs. Glenn had protested. She said if there was ever a time when a man ought to stay at home and make himself agreeable it was during the Christmas holidays. The boys thought I 'might stay and pop fi-quackers wif 'em,' and Mary Jane, to whom I seldom looked in vain for sympathetic appreciation, declared that it was 'simply awful' even to think of going away at such a time.

"But I did think about it. I had plan-ned it months before, and had said to myself again and again that when the corn had all been shucked, the fodder ricked and the winter wood hauled, I in-tended to take a 'week off'-I was going back to the old home-place and to the seenes of early childhood. There had not been a day in all the passing years since, as a youth, I had turned to catch the last sad glimpse of farewell signals, that I could not have called to mind the ficture then presented, and have felt again the boyish, homesick grief that filled my heart as I went down the old familiar ane, over the hill that led by the school-

A BOY AGAIN.

"I wanted to go back and be a boy once more and to shake hands with the memories of the past, I wanted to lorget all the cares and sorrows the years since then had brought, and to sleep once more in the little room with its trundle-bed memories of a mother's love and of a sweet face touching mine. "I love to think that memory brings back to us, unmarred by time, the scenes and incidents of our early me, and that all the intervening years are powerless to change for us the faces seen in youth and never seen again. And so the picture of the old home-place, with its lights and shadows and biessed memories, nas ever been the same, and the song of the mockby the porch is as sweet to-day as when it came in, many, many years ago, through the little open window that looked out just where the big chimney made its bend.

FACE TO FACE.

"Yes, I was going back-despite all protests—and breathe the very atmosphere of early recollections. I intended to stand face to face with memory, and take a closer view of the picture of the old tarmhouse with its high-pitched root and its long veranda, hid beneath the honeysuckle and wisteria. suckle and wisteria. "How well did 1 remember every detail

"How weil and I remember every decail of the picture and every spot that marked some fond association: I would visit all or them. I would go to the spring at the foot of the hill, where the great oaks stood (the goured is on the rock to the left), and to the milk-house—just below—with the pages great out on ton to catch with the pans spread out on top to catch the sunshine, and with the skimmer— the measure of a boy's reward for churning-hanging against the tree close by Would I be in time for butchering? And at the thought there came the recollec-tion of slipping out of bed while yet the stars were bright, of dressing by the light of the big tire in the sitting-room, and of peeping through the window at the larger fire Nown in the corner of the orchard by the spring. What glorious anticipations of roasted pig-tails, of biadders to be burst, of chine and spare ribs and of cracklin' bread that was to come RABBIT'S HIND-FOOT.

"I would go again through the orchard, beyond the pasture, to the field of low pines and of brushwood, to where the rabbit gums were hid among the broom sedge and the 'high-briars.' gum was 'down,' and through the trigger-hole I saw a rabbit's back, would the wish again come to me that his head was from the door? I believed it would. One of the familiar paths led to the school-house on the hill—the dear, old school-house with its scribbled walls and school-house with its scribber wans and whittled desks, and ink spots on the floor-and to the recollection of a little brown-haired girl, who knew the word I missd, but, blushing, spelled it wrong to save me grief. Would I know her desk and mine, and would I feel the love and pride that filled me once, as I recalled the memory of her smile, and read once the flower-stained notes she wrote me? I thought-I knew-I would, ANTNY OVER. "I would go again to the 'deep hole,' with its rock for diving, and with its catfish that I feared to touch. I would day 'antny' over the smoke-house, and hunt eggs in the barn loft, and at night, if the wind was high, I would listen for the scraping of the locust bough on the window by the bed and think of the ghost stories Aunt Charlotte used to tell.

I would be very happy.
"And while the snow lay lightly on the ground about me there was warmth and sunshine in my heart. The picture that came to me was full of flowers and summer fragrance, and in happy anticipation I lived again under the high-pitched roof. once more in the little cedar by and the honevsuckles were in bloom. In every room there were familiar faces and the voices of loved ones, and from out the orchard, just back of the garden, came the song of many birds.

STOOD TOO NEAR. "But when, in truth, I climbed again the stairway to the little room, and went, as I had gone so many times before, to where I knew the trundle bed must be, the homesick grief was still within me, and every sweet and hallowed memory was tinged with sadness. The fault was mine-not in the picture-I stood too near.

"In fancy once again I played at 'hide and seek, and built snow men, and rode stick horses-all this and more upon the very spots I had done the same long years before. And through the key-holes in the kitchen door-holes left by locks removed—I watched once more the snow birds and the trap I had set to catch them. But the words of blame and praise I longed to hear were missing, and the arms I longed to feel once more about me were not

The Academy was filled last night and the appeause accessed the favor with which the programme was received. A very agreeated feature was the newness of the selections. The grand scene from Alda brought out the funest effects of the brass, and the sweet, deep fullness of tone-with-out the blare and narshness so often heard-is the greatest triumph of these artists.

Sousa's new march, Hail to the Spirit of Liberty, is characteristic and in its first movement very plensing. The finance, however, cannot compare with the stir-ring, puisating finish of his prior suc-

The ourlesque boxing match created much merriment. One of the artistic successes of the pro gramme was Alcide Capitaine, the beau-tiful trapeze performer. She executed ome most remarkable feats on the fly ing trapeze, and the display of muscular development was wonderful. Her act is one of the prettiest of the kind ever seen in Richmond. Another act, somewhat similar, was that of the Gloss Brothers in Greek posings and exercises on the parallel bars.

A delightful part of the programme was Mr. Lewis, who sang operatic selections with rare skill and brought forth storms of applause by singing "The Palms" as a

(By Associated Press.) NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 14,-Although in the depth of winter this well-known watering place to-day took on a semblance of its summer gaiety, because of the wedding of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, probably the most wealthy of the third generation of the Vanderbilt family and Miss Elsie French, a charming Newport girl, and former playmate of the bridegroom, the daughter of Mrs. Frederick Orme French, a resident of the city for many years. A brighter sun never shone for any bride, and in spite of a crispness in the air, it did not seem to be a winter's day

WEDDING AT NOON. The ceremony took place at noon, in the Zabriski Memorial church of St. John the Evangelist, far up in the old north part of the city, on the very shores of Narragansett Bay, once the centre of Newport's fashion, but now far removed from the social whirl of Bellevue Avenue. Miss French made the choice of her own place of worship and her own home for the scene of her marriage, instead of selecting the more pretentious, but less familiar surroundings which would have been found in New York. Under these conditions, the hundred or more guests were forced to make a journey to a city as quiet at this time of the year, as an obscure country village.

THE DECORATIONS.

The festivities, however, did not suffer from these unusual circumstances. The church, which was decorated with gorgeous lavishness, was only about half filled with guests, the invitations having been limited to relatives and close friends of the couple. The services was as ornate as the highest forms of the Episcopal Church could make it, the wedding procession a picture of loveliness and fine gowns and the breakfast, which closed the formal proceedings of the day, was one of the grandest ever served in this city.

GUESTS EARLY. Although the ceremony was set for noon at an hour or more before that time saw the arrival of some of the guests at the church and those who came about 11 o'clock had the pleasure of listening to an organ concert and found leisure to marvel at the floral decorations. Pink, green and white in many charming combinations were the prevailing colors, the distinctive flowers being the gloire de la Reine Bengoras, the golden gate roses with white azaleas, and the spe-cimen palm. The centre aisle was a lane of begonias and asparagus, standards eight feet high being trimmed with the feathery foliage of the asparagus at reguar intervals from the entrance of church to the chancel. Baskets of deli-cate pink flowers depended from the standards.

SPLENDID PALMS. Specimen palms thirty feet high towered above the altar. Interspersed among th ferns and foliage which banked them, were great clusters of white of azeleas and medallions of golden gate roses. On the altar was an immense cross of ascen sion lilles. The programme of the organ concert, which occupied the hour preced-ing the ceremony, was selected by Miss French. The choir boys of the church marched in quietly at 11:20, and led in two of the hymans assigned to them.

The programme was as follows overture-"Tannhauses"-Wagner Festival Prelude-Guirand.

Eight personal friends of the bridegroom acted as ushers. They were Messrs. BRIDE'S GOWN. The brides gown was of rich ivory-white satin, the skirt having a train more than three yards in length. Long close-fitting sleeves of satin were finished with deep cuffs of exquisite lace; the high col-iar of corsage was also of lace. The bot-tom of the skirt around the long train was trimmed with tulle and sprays of orange blossoms. The bridal veil, entirely covering the gown and falling to the end of the train, was a magnificent place of brussels point lace, and was the same veil worn by her sister when she married General Eaton, in England, ten years ago. The bride car (CONTINUED ON SEVENTH PAGE.)

The Necessity of Music to Man, for Pastime, Enjoyment, Development, Education, and Entertainment.

Music is the fourth great material want of naturefirst food, then raiment, then shelter, then music.

It delights the idie, it gives strength to the laborer; it soothes the sick, relieves the tired brain, and builds up the overworked body. Music ennobles those who study it as well as those who listen.

Little wonder that there are few homes that can afford it that contain no musical instrument. The human mind loves melody, and as Addison has said: "Music is the only sensual gratification in which mankind may indulge to ex cess without injury to their moral or religious feelings." and, it might be added, without profligacy; for a piano, once owned, means the most esthetic enjoyment without cost for every leisure moment.
